

Rama and the Bridge of Courage

By Rahul P S

This is Prince Rama. He was kind and brave. This is his wife, Princess Sita. They lived in a beautiful city called Ayodhya. They were very happy together.

Rama had to go away for a long time. He went to live in the forest. Sita and his brother, Lakshmana, went with him. The forest was green and quiet.

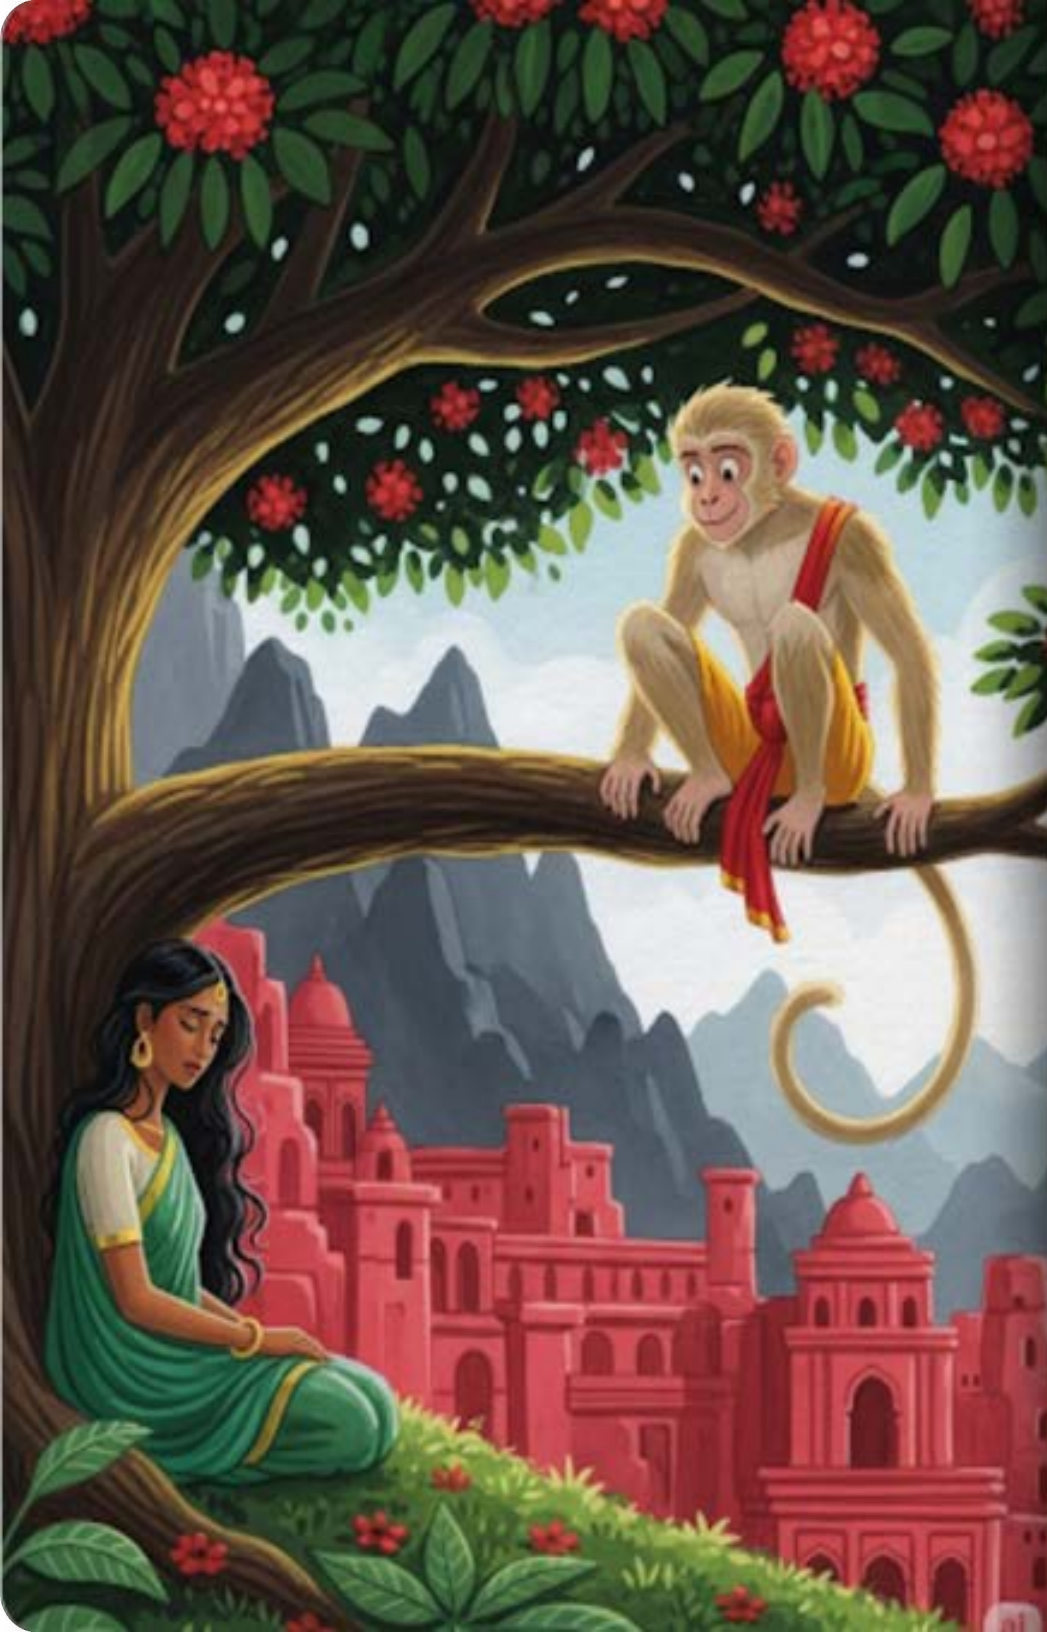

One day, Sita saw a magical deer. She wanted it very much. Rama and Lakshmana went to look for it. Sita stayed alone in their little hut.

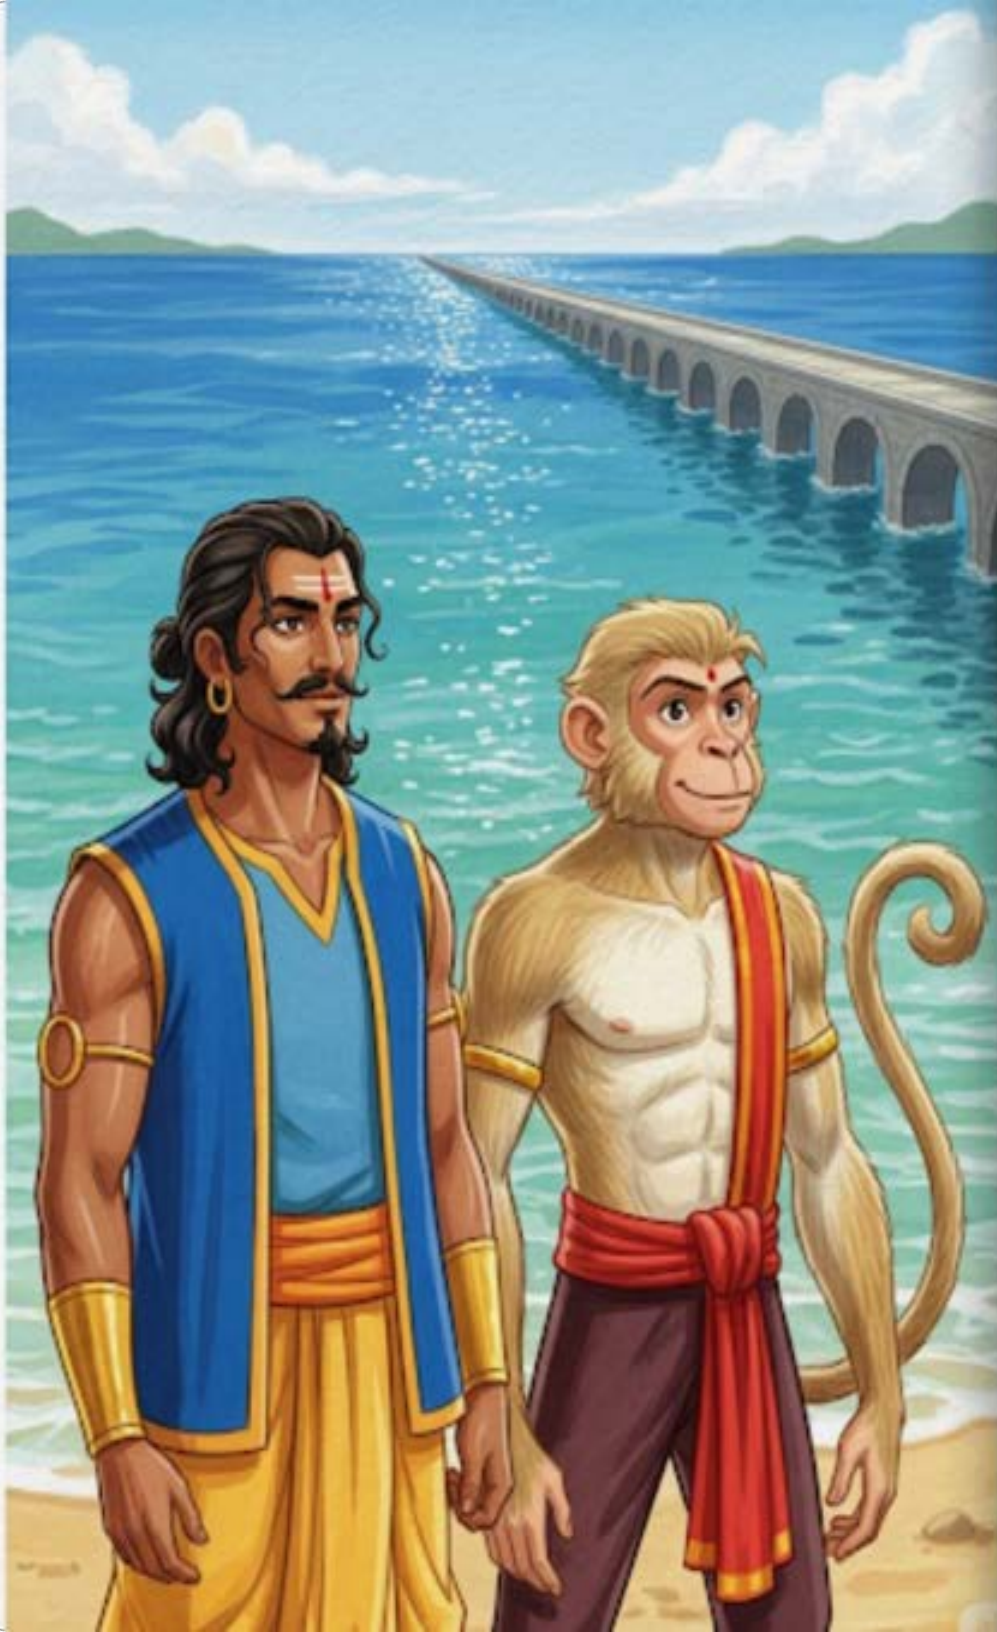

A powerful, mean King named Ravana came. He used trickery and took Sita far away. He flew her across the big blue ocean to his island, Lanka.

Rama came back. Sita was gone! Rama was very, very sad. He needed help. He met a strong, loyal friend named Hanuman. Hanuman was a brave monkey general.

Hanuman promised to find Sita. He leaped across the giant ocean! He flew high above the clouds until he reached Lanka. He found Sita sitting under a tree.

Hanuman told Sita, "Rama is coming!"
He raced back to tell Rama. Rama gathered his friends, the Vanara army.
They built a huge bridge of colorful stones across the water.

Rama and his friends marched across the bridge. They fought Ravana. Rama was very strong and good. He won the fight against the mean king.

Rama and Sita flew home to Ayodhya.
Everyone cheered! The whole city lit up with tiny, colorful lamps. They ruled happily ever after, side by side.
